With regard to the questions of your letter of 5 January 1948, there are two alternatives possible. If it is convenient for you to report upon appointment to Portland, Oregon, it would be possible to forgo a period of orientation in Washington, D.C., for you. In this case you would spend about one week at Portland and about one week at Reseda, California, before leaving for the Islands.

If, however, your personal plans necessitate a trip east, it would be best for you to report to Washington for a few days before seeing the Portland and Reseda stations on your way to your own post.

Very truly yours,
